A BURIED CITY IN THE PANHANDLE

(From the Higgins News.)

On the upper reaches of Wolf creek, about forty-five miles northwest of Higgins, is what has been known to the old timers of the Panhandle, as the "Buried City."

It is located on what was the Freyer ranch, now owned by the Handy Bros., on an elevated land, about four hundred yards to the south of the creek, and, at about the same distance from the cliffs on the south bank of the creek.

Last week Warren K. Morehead, curator of the department of geology of Phillips Academy of Andover, Mass., and a crew of men were digging in the ruins of the "Buried City" and exploring the country round about.

Whatever could be found that would be of interest to the scientific world. In all his party of explorers discovered the ruins of twenty-six old time dwellings. Old, perhaps when Columbus sailed across the unknown water of the western sea.

Most of these ruins, which consist only of the lower walls, are located on the Handy place, the rest being scattered along the valley of Wolf creek at widely separated locations.

Beyond locating the ruins at other points the explorers made no excavations at any point other than on the Handy place.

At this point the lower walls of a number of buildings were located, which show their presence only by the upper portion of the walls showing through the short grass, clearly indicating in most cases the outline of the four walls of the buildings.

The largest, a building which was forty feet by seventy feet was explored, and every evidence was found of a very ancient civilization, which may possibly have ante-dated the cliff dwellers.

In this building, in which human skeletons, ancient pottery, bones of animals, and various other things had been previously found, the explorers discovered portions of two human skeletons, some fragments of pottery, flint arrow heads and war points; and several small ornaments made of mother of pearl, beautifully shaped and of excellent workmanship.

In the ruin five "ash-pits" were found, and from these places where the aborigines built their fires, cook their food and warm themselves the bulk of the finds were made.

Professor Morehead says that sufficient of these relics were found to establish the fact that these people were of the same "race" as the cliff dwellers, but he does not determine yet whether the ruins of the cliffs of Wolf creek are the forerunners of the cliff dwellers or those that came after that race of people.

From what the writer saw on the ground some ten days ago seems to be quite evident that the tribe of the ancient residents of the Panhandle was destroyed, either by enemies, or by some cataclysmic nature. It is likely that an earthquake, or a landslide from the cliffs above, scattered the ruins of the buildings and in the same state of preservation as the walls that are now
